Karimzadeh, Jafar

The Verbal Constructions in Azari (Harzani Dialect)

Supervised by: Dr. A. Mirhassani

M.A. in Linguistics

Tarbiat Modarres University, 1993, 113 p. Bib., Glossary.

Abstract:

In this study, the verbal structure in Azari (Harzani dialect) is discussed. Azari was the Iranian language of Azarbaijan before the spread of the Turkish language, commonly called Azari , in the region. There are some regional Iranian dialects in some areas of Azarbaijan. Since these dialects have preserved the old linguistic features within the Turkish language, so these are known as linguistic islands. The most important of these dialects are Harzani, Tati and Khalkhali. The central point for Harzani is Galinghaya village, in Harzand at rural area of Marand, and the central points for Tati are keringan and Arzil villages. The method used in this research is descriptive. In this method, the data is obtained from the informants' statements. These statements, which were produced through many interviews, have been recorded on the tape cassettes. This study reveals that, the verbal constructions of the Harzani dialect are inflectional rather than derivational. There is a specific lexical relationship between the verbals of Harzani and those of Pahlavi language. The different types of verbals have got specific inflectional affixes. There are specific rules for the construction of the different verbal constructions.

منبع: کتاب چکیده پایان نامه های حوزۀ زبان و زبان شناسی- دوره های تحصیلات تکمیلی دانشگاههای دولتی و آزاد ۱۳۳۳-۱۳۸۵- گردآوری و تدوین: محمدامین ناصح- انتشارات دانشگاه علامه طباطبایی، چاپ اول ۱۳۸۶- صفحه 49 از بخش انگلیسی.